VOW Labour chief Starmer: I'll cut power of Westminster

BY CHRIS MCLAUGHLIN

LABOUR'S leader Keir Starmer will tomorrow set out his aim to shift power away from Westminster in a new wave of devolution.

In a speech on the future of the Union, he will say handing decision-making to local levels will make UK borders "obsolete".

It underpins Labour's fightback in May's Scottish Parliamentary elections.

He will say in his live-stream speech: "I'm determined to preserve and renew the United Kingdom."

"I may be the first person to run for PM on a manifesto that aims to push as much power as possible away from Westminster."

INFO DEMAND Rishi Sunak

Which firms got furlough funds, Rishi?

BY NIGEL NELSON

CHANCELLOR Rishi Sunak will today be ordered to reveal where all his furlough cash has gone.

The Commons spending watchdog wants him to publish names of firms that received the money by the end of January.

Meg Hillier, Public Accounts Committee chairwoman, said: "With the Treasury claiming it can't give even a ballpark figure... until the end of next year, public scrutiny of where taxpayers' money is going is essential."

"We want to see the list much sooner than that."

PAC MPs also say HMRC does not know how much fraud and error has cost.

WE'D STILL VOTE LEAVE

EXCLUSIVE BY NIGEL NELSON

LEAVE would win again if the Brexit vote were rerun, despite fears over the economic carnage leaving the EU will cause.

A Sunday Mirror poll found eight in ten voters have not changed their minds since the 2016 referendum.

Four years ago 52 per cent voted to leave, with 48 per cent for remaining.

Now 50.4 per cent want out, with 49.6 per cent wishing to stay, just scraping a victory for the leavers.

The result is especially surprising as we teeter on the edge of a no-deal Brexit, amid dire warnings of chaos at the border and the costs to families.

The British Retail Consortium is warning of £3.1 billion in import taxes, which would add an average 20 per cent to tariffs payable on food.

In a no-deal scenario, 7,000 of the 10,000 lorries arriving at Dover each day would be hit by long delays.

There are also likely to be shortages of fresh food, and six in ten medicines could be held up for three months.

More than one in ten of those surveyed said they had begun stockpiling, with 17 per cent planning to do so. Only just over half, six in ten, said they had no intention of panic buying.

Of those stocking up, more than four in ten are putting away toilet paper, tinned goods and dried foods such as cereals, pasta and rice.

More than one in three are filling their freezers as well as buying stores of medicines such as ibuprofen and paracetamol.

Some 30 per cent are buying light-bulbs and batteries, and 25 per cent are getting in supplies of long-life milk, bottled water and booze.

Nearly one in four voters think that Boris Johnson should quit as PM if he cannot pull off a deal, rising to 54 per cent among Remain supporters.

But 45 per cent think he should stay on regardless of the outcome of talks.

If there is a deal, MPs have been put on standby to return to Parliament this week. The EU Parliament has given negotiators a deadline of today.

But talks in Brussels have stalled again over how long it will take to bring in new fisheries rules.

The UK's chief negotiator David Frost says that Britain must control its own fishing rights from day one.

EU chief negotiator Michel Barnier warned: "This is the moment of truth. "There is the chance of a deal but the path is very narrow."

But Cabinet Office boss Michael Gove said negotiations could continue right up until the new-year cut off.
